Bottom Line:
Idaho will remain a top performer in 2018.
Job growth will slow
because of labor market tightness, yielding aboveaverage wage growth. Long term, high affordability compared with the West Coast will keep ID
attractive as a destination,
but slower high-wage tech hiring will keep per capita

Bottom Line:

Expansion in tourism and healthcare-related fields will help Montana narrow the employment growth gap with the rest of the West and the U.S. in the short term, but the state boasts few other private sector drivers. The Treasure State will lag its more dynamic western peers and will rank among the slowest-growth economies through the next decade.
