

Unusual Machines Launches NDAA Compliant, Made in the USA Flight Controller for FPV Drones

ORLANDO, FL / ACCESSWIRE / July 16, 2024 / Unusual Machines, Inc. (NYSE American:UMAC) ("Unusual Machines" or the "Company"), a drone and drone components manufacturer, today announced the launch of the Rotor Riot Brave F7 Flight Controller. This product is manufactured in the USA and is fully compliant with the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA).

"We are currently in the Blue UAS approval process for the Brave F7 Flight Controller. This underscores our commitment to supply chain transparency and regulatory compliance." said Allan Evans, CEO of Unusual Machines. "This U.S. based production is our first step in providing a more secure and reliable supply chain to our consumer, commercial, and government customers."

Starting today, the Rotor Riot Brave F7 Flight Controller is available for pre-sale at an introductory price of $49.50 (reduced from the regular retail price of $58) on the Rotor Riot e-commerce store. The special introductory price expires on August 15, 2024. The first orders are expected to start shipping early in August. The Rotor Riot Brave F7 Flight Controller is also available for wholesale purchase to other retailers, enterprise, and government customers.

"We are thrilled to introduce our first US-made component," said Drew Camden, COO at Unusual Machines. "The Brave F7 Flight Controller represents a significant milestone for our company and is the first step on our ambitious roadmap of having a suite of American-made components."

Stacy Wright, President of Rotor Riot, added, "The Brave F7 Flight Controller is designed by our Rotor Riot team with the FPV pilot in mind. We are committed to serving our FPV hobby and are proud to offer high-quality, reliable American-made drone components at a very competitive price."
